Ms. Sena Chang, 20, Japan / South Korea

Sena Chang is a Japanese-Korean journalist and student at Princeton University's School of Public and International Affairs. She is the associate news editor leading investigations at her campus paper, The Daily Princetonian. She has held fellowships at The Asian American Journalists Association and The Nation and has reported from Japan, Cyprus, and the U.S. Sena also has bylines in Teen Vogue, The Nation, and The Diplomat, and she has been recognized by the New Jersey Press Foundation and the Columbia Scholastic Press Awards, among others. Sena has also spoken and testified at a variety of high-level forums and meetings on corruption, climate, and youth, including at UN Headquarters, Microsoft Japan, and the Asia-Pacific ECOSOC Youth Forum. Through the advisory board, she is particularly interested in examining how press freedoms can persist in the digital age and the intersection of AI and anti-corruption advocacy. She was raised between Washington, D.C., Seoul, and Tokyo.
