

Salahaldeen is an innovation designer, youth enabler, community leader, and creative problem solver. His work and passion are to design programs and solutions using his knowledge and experience, along with a diverse toolkit of capabilities to support teams, start-ups, and organizations through the transition from where they are now to where they need to be tomorrow. He also leads them to be more effective, innovative, and human-centred in their operations and solutions.

Salahaldeen believes that interdisciplinary education promotes innovation, open-mindedness, and creativity. Emerging from this idea, he intends to gain knowledge and experience in different but connected fields. Besides his bachelor's degree in computer engineering, he gained specialized expertise in business and entrepreneurship by being a Global Business Institute scholar at the Kelley School of Business - Indiana University. He also obtained a diploma from the European Innovation Academy in entrepreneurship and innovation and a Micro-Master's program in project management from the Rochester Institute of Technology (RIT). Moreover, he took some courses, training, and workshops in leadership, innovation, system development, strategic planning, communication, negotiation, philosophy, human behaviour, emotional intelligence, and design thinking. He combines these fields to form a complete picture and build a comprehensive understanding.

As a people-oriented person, Salahaldeen believes in the power of human connection and interaction, so he got involved in many organizations and communities. He was rewarded with a Global Citizens scholarship from the Ban Ki-moon Centre for Global Citizens to demonstrate his commitment to the Global Sustainable Goals (SDG) in his community and be part of their alumni network. He is also a Global Shaper and an impact officer at the World Economic Forum's Global Shapers Community, which is a network of young people who volunteer their time and experiences to drive dialogue, action, and change to create a positive impact in their communities.
